The CASE of the reverend Mr. JOHN GOOLE, &c. continued.

ON the monday following, being June 7th, Miſs HUDSON's ſixth letter, dated the ſame day, was delivered to Mr. GOOLE; wherein ſhe expreſſed herſelf in the following moſt affectionate manner. 'My deareſt Love, The only 'pleaſure I can enjoy, without converſing with you, is to hear you are well, and that you 'got ſafe home; for I muſt own I am anxious for your 'ſafety, when you are abroad ſo late: for how can I 'ſleep contented, when my guide, my husband, father, friend, and all that is dear to me, is expoſed to danger, 'for my ſake? ---- I think it will be beſt to defer our 'meeting on thurſday till the time you appointed in your 'laſt; tho' it is hard to deny myſelf the ſatisfaction of 'your agreeable company; yet, upon ſuch an occaſion, 'I muſt ſubmit. —— If there is any thing that can be 'called happineſs on earth, I believe it is the union of 'two perſons, who love each other, without aiming at 'any advantages by love, then love itſelf; their hearts 'are full, and leave no vacancy for any other paſſion. I 'am continually thinking of you ſleeping and waking; 'nay, when my mind ſhould be otherwiſe employed, 'your image ſteals inſenſibly between my devotions and 'me. And now I am laying open the ſtate of my ſoul; 'if it be not going too far to tell you, I loved you, when 'it was impoſſible for me to have the leaſt return. I rea'ſoned with myſelf how extravagant it was to indulge 'a paſſion which was againſt all laws human and divine, 'and ſtruggled hard to overcome it, and made a hun'dred reſolutions not to entertain ſo much as a thought; 'but when you appeared, it all vaniſhed, love was too 'powerful for a woman, for we are weak in all reſpects, 'and more in this then any. ——— You ſeem to have 'ſome ſlight jealouſy of this intended rival. O! don't 'ſuſpect my conſtancy, for had I not gave you a vow, it 'would have been impoſſible for any thing to alter my love: 'was be maſter of all the eloquence of an orator, it would 'be loſt on me, for my heart is inſenſible, it is armed with 'ice, and it is not in the power of any perſon to warm it 'but you; you only can give eaſe to my mind, and tune my 'ſoul. All my future happineſs depends upon you; and to 'deſerve all that love and tenderneſs, which I hope you 'have for me, ſhall be the continual ſtudy of your affec'tionate M. HUDSON.

This letter, being ſo very frank and affectionate, made Mr. GOOLE very deſirous of paying his miſtreſs his moſt grateful acknowledgments for it in perſon, as ſoon as ſafely he could: In order to which, having met PENTYCROSS the next thurſday, June 10, at Eynſham-mill; and being informed by him, that he might, without any danger, wait upon her that night, becauſe the watch generally took up their ſtand under the ſchool-houſe before their time of meeting; he gave him a letter for her, to acquaint her, that he would wait upon her at eleven that night, which accordingly he did.

After as kind a reception and entertainment as ſhe could give, or he deſire, ſhe ſayed to him, 'Dear Sir, you have 'engaged yourſelf to me in the moſt honourable manner 'that ever gentleman engaged himſelf to his miſtreſs; 'and I think 'tis time for me to engage myſelf to you'. To which he anſwered, 'My Dear, tho' I was reſolved 'never to preſs you to it, yet you may aſſure yourſelf, 'I ſhall accept of it with great joy and gratitude; and, 'if you approve of it, I know no method more binding, 'or more ſacred, than the office of the church, which I 'am ſure I can repeat. (This he ſayed on purpoſe to caution her of the conſequence of what they were going to do.) To which ſhe replied, 'With all my heart'. He then asked her, 'Whether there was any thing be'tween Mr. BOYCE and her'? Her anſwer was, that ſhe 'had had nothing to ſay to him for above a twelvemonth'. Whereupon Mr. GOOLE ſay'd, 'Riſe then My Dear', (for ſhe was ſitting upon his right knee in the window, in her mother's parlour) which ſhe immediately did; and to contract themſelves with as much ſeriouſneſs and ſolemnity as might be, he roſe too. Then both ſtanding, he with his right hand taking her by hers, ſayed, I JOHN take thee MARGARET, &c. Then letting go her hand, he ſayed, 'My Dear, now you muſt take me by my right 'hand', which ſhe did, and repeated after him, I MARGARET take thee John, &c. After which he ſay'd to her, 'My Dear, I left out to love, honour, and obey'. She anſwered 'Ah, dear Sir, how came you to leave out 'thoſe words'? He replied, 'I don't know; but they 'ſhould be in': and ſhe anſwering, 'So they ſhould': he ſayed, 'Madam, you muſt begin again'. She thereupon, with her right hand taking him by his, repeated the whole after him, mentioning the words omitted. — He then put a ring, with the inſcription Creſcat amor, upon the fourth finger of her left hand; and holding it there, ſayed, With this ring, &c. When he had done, he ſayed to her, 'Now, my Dear, you are my wife, as 'much as ever you can be, in the preſence of God'. To which ſhe anſwered, 'Yes, I deſigned it ſo, or I 'would not have done it'. And thereupon ſhe immediately threw both her arms about his neck, and preſſed his face to hers for a conſiderable time.

On June 12, Miſs HUDSON wrote her ſeventh letter, beginning thus, 'To hear my deareſt Love got ſafe and 'undiſcovered home, is a very great ſatisfaction to me, '&c'. and concluding they 'little think we enjoy ſo 'much ſatisfaction in converſing with each other, for 'none but they that love can tell. I hope I ſhall be able 'to meet you at the time appointed, which will be the 'greateſt ſatisfaction imaginable to, Dear Sir, your af'fectionate Love, M HUDSON. ——— Mr. GOOLE waited upon her again June 14, and tenderly expoſtulated with her, becauſe ſhe had not ſigned herſelf his Spouſe in the preceding letter; and inſiſted, that, ſince ſhe knew herſelf to be ſuch, ſhe ought to write herſelf ſo: and and how obedient ſhe was in that particular, her ſubſequent letters ſhew.

He met her again June 18: and on the 19th ſhe wrote the following letter. 'My deareſt Dear, I hope you 'got home ſafe without taking cold, tho' I was fearfull 'leſt any misfortune ſhould befall you, tho' I had good 'ſucceſs and got to bed undiſcovered. The greateſt happineſs I can enjoy in this world, is to converſe with 'one who is ſo dear to me as you are: with what pleaſure do I ſpend thoſe few hours, and how ſoon do they 'paſs away in your converſation; for you are infinitely 'dearer to me than any thing upon earth; all temporal en'joyments would be dull and inſipid without you; nay, life 'itſelf would become a burthem, if I were to be deprived 'of the only object I could love in it'. I have read part of 'your ſermon, and am extreamly pleaſed with your in'ſtructions; and I will endeavour to live conformable to 'thoſe rules which you have laid down for the regulating of my conduct; and, as I always ſhall have a de'ſire to pleaſe, ſo if there is any thing you miſlike in 'my behaviour, I hope you will put the favourableſt con'ſtructions upon it, for it is not my deſign to give the 'leaſt offence in any thing, if I can help it, as long as I 'live, but to behave myſelf in all reſpects, as I am in 'duty bound, and becomes Your dutiful and affectionate 'Spouſe, M. H.

The next time of meeting was June 22, about which time Mr. GOOLE, in one of his letters, had intreated her not to love him too well. He was inclined to believe, that her life was wrapped up in his; and therefore a generous and tender regard for her happineſs was the ſole cauſe of that uncommon petition. He was indeed very deſirous, that even his death, had it pleaſed God in his mercy then to have put an end to his days, ſhould have been very little or no interruption to her peace. This was probably the firſt requeſt of the ſort, that ever was offered by a gentleman who thought himſelf only a lover, or anſwered in the ſame manner by an ingenious gentlewoman, who deemed herſelf leſs than a wife. The manner in which ſhe anſwered it here follows, being part of her ninth letter dated June 24, 'My dear, dear Love, 'You intreat me in your laſt not to love you too well, 'I would not willingly diſobey any command you lay 'upon me, but I can't comply in this; 'tis a thing im'poſſible for me to do; I can't help loving you, you are 'dearer to me than life, and I could ſooner part with it 'then you. My paſſion is of too long a date to be extin'guiſhed by any thing but death. Tho' abſence often'times is a remedy for love, yet that has had no effect 'on me; nay, even when I thought you had left me, 'and tho' I was exceedingly vexed with you, yet it did 'not laſt long, for my love was ſtronger than my anger'. This letter was ſubſcribed like the former; Your affecti'onate and dutiful Spouſe, M. H.

He waited on her that night, the 24th, and acquainting her, that he ſhould go for London on the 29th, offered to make her another viſit on the monday following, being the 28th. To which ſhe replied, 'No, my 'dear Love, I ſhall not be eaſy, ſhould you, after ſitting 'up the whole night, begin your journey; and there'fore pray let me ſee you on ſunday, and then you will 'have a night's reſt before you ſet out'. —— In conſequence of this, on ſunday June 27th, after Miſs HUDSON had publickly received the bleſſed ſacrament in the pariſh church of Eynſham from Mr. GOOLE's hands, he met her privately in the evening; when ſhe received him in the ſame manner, in which ſhe had done on the 14th, 18th, 22d, and 24th, viz. As ſoon as ſhe ſaw him, ſhe took him about the neck with one or both her arms; preſſed his face to hers; kiſſed him as long as her breath would laſt, and then led him to a ſeat, generally to a wrought elbow chair; and as ſoon as he ſate down, immediately, and unasked, ſate in his lap, and careſſed him with the utmoſt earneſtneſs and complacency; which he did not think ſhe would have done, had ſhe not really and ſeriouſly thought herſelf his wife. She renewed and confirmed all her vows and promiſes till near midnight: and Mr. GOOLE, knowing the violence and baſeneſs of Mrs. HALL, and being very apprehenſive of what ſhe might do during his ſtay in London, thought proper to caution Miſs HUDSON againſt every attempt that might be made upon her to his prejudice, and her infamy; and gave her five guineas (and offered her more) which ſhe accepted, to hire a chariot to bring her to him, ſhould her mother, in his abſence, force her from Eynſham. And to put him out of all his fears, ſhe promiſed him, if poſſible, to get away from her mother while he was in London; and, if ſhe could not avoid a diſcovery of their love, that ſhe would actually declare to her mother, and all her relations, that ſhe was his wife; in what manner they were contracted; and that ſhe would go no whither from Eynſham, but to him, or by his advice.

A New Critical Review of the public buildings, &c. by Mr. HIRAM.

THE frontiſpiece at the enterance to the new Playhouſe is another expenſive, but ridiculous performance; wherein the deſigner has introduced his ruſtics about the ſhafts of the columns, and thereby deſtroyed that beauty, which the columns would have produced. Theſe ruſtics or ſquare bands were originally applied to the ſhafts of wooden columns, to ſtrengthen and bind their parts together, ſo as to prevent their ſhivering or burſting when any extraordinary weight ſhould be impreſſed on them. Had the two ſmall Corinthian columns juſt ſpoken off, been ſtrengthened in this manner, the architect had done right; for thereby they would have appeared more capable of ſupporting ſo heavy a burthen. But here, where nothing more than a trifling entablature is to be ſuſtained, no ſuch ſtrength in the ſhafts is required; and therefore is abſurd. I remember to have ſeen Ionic columns of this kind, in a frontiſpiece to the gate, at the enterance from the road to the old houſe of my lord BURLINGTON at Chiſwick, which are, I believe, yet ſtanding; and which were probably looked upon as a model proper to be followed here, having been erected either by the order, or with the permiſſion of ſo great an architect.

The entablature which is continued over the enterance is falſe architecture, and ought not to have been there, that the ſemi-circle over it might have been conſidered, as a part of the aperture; altho' the lowneſs of the ceiling within would not admit the whole to open ſo high. Had the ſemicircle been made to repreſent the upper parts of the gates, but been fixed; and had the gates opened at the ſame height they now do, it would have had a much more magnificent effect. Methinks, as this is an enterance to a theatre, ſome hieroglyphics, alluding to the vertues and vices of the place, ſhould have been introduced, in lieu of the trifling ornaments we now ſee in the circular coved part, and which betray a barrenneſs of invention. And therefore it ſeems ſtrange to me, that our Critic, who is ſo great a judge, ſhould take ſo much notice of the admirable propriety of the figure of the ſatire over the pit; and take none at all of the want of propriety in this grand enterance.

The Tuſcan portico to the church in Covent-garden has really a ſolemn aſpect, which in its ſimple beauty, is not to be parallelled by any that I know in or about London. The extraordinary projecture of the cornice (which is equal to a fourth part of the height of the order) I muſt own is, in my opinion, ſomething too great; the modillions or ends of the joiſts ſeeming to be overloaded, and to ſtand in need of ſome help by way of truſs, &c. to aſſiſt them in ſuſtaining ſo great a weight. To ſupport the angles of this cornice over the portico, angular modillions are placed; which, I think, is a miſtake, as having a very ill effect, ſince theſe angles might have been ſuſtained without, as thoſe are at the weſt end. —— The windows to this church, which our Critic ſays, are out of proportion, are indeed of about five diameters in height: but as they are made to illuminate ſo large a ſpace, I cannot be of his opinion. —— The two grand doors in the middle of each end, over which plain cornices are fixed, ſupported by truſſes, would have been much more ſimple and grand, had they been made with their architraves only. —— The ruſtics at the quoins of this church are very particular, and, if I may be permitted to ſpeak freely, are entirely falſe; being made by ſquare blocks of ſtone, whoſe dimenſions on both ſides are equal, inſtead of being headers and ſtretchers alternately, which make the beſt bondage, as being of all others the moſt ſubſtantial. —— In the two ruſtic frontiſpieces at the enterances into the church-yard, is a very groſs error, which muſt not eſcape animadverſion, that for the future it may be avoided. This is the cutting of the channels to form the ruſtics into the bodies of the pillaſters, under both the impoſts and capitals; which is a weakening inſtead of a ſtrengthening to them. And therefore it is to be remembered, that wherever ruſtics are to be introduced, their thickneſs ſhould exceed the uprights of the pillaſters, ſo as to repreſent perfect bands, binding their parts moſt firmly together. ——— Tho' our Critic ſays, 'This church is without a rival, and 'one of the moſt perfect pieces of architecture that the 'art of man can produce', yet I cannot think ſo; being well aſſured, that if a ſteeple of proper dimenſions was raiſed above the pediment, 'twould be a very great improvement to the whole.

XXXVI. Could I think it good architecture to break the architraves of windows by block ruſtics, and to introduce ſmall pillaſters with great ones in the ſame front: I ſhould believe the eaſt end of the church of St. Martins in the fields, to be the moſt perfect piece of architecture in or about London: but as I look upon both theſe to be abſurdities, I think they extreamly diminiſh the ſolemn grandeur of this edifice. —— Perhaps it may be aſked, How would I have had thoſe windows ornamented? I anſwer, with their entire architraves only: and to the Venetian window, inſtead of pillaſters, crowned with Ionic capitals, I would have placed plain pillaſters, with Corinthian impoſts thereon; and from them turned the ſemicircular architrave, exactly in every reſpect, as is done, when arches with their impoſts are introduced between columns, ſupporting an entablature. And then the impoſt on each ſide, being continued and ſupported by two of the ſame pillaſters, at the diſtance of half the middle aperture, the whole would have appeared of one kind or order, and been truly magnificent. Beſides, ruſtics are properly the ornament of the Tuſcan order, not the Corinthian, the order after which this church is built; and this is a ſufficient proof, that to introduce ruſtics with the Corinthian order, is a great abſurdity.

The north and ſouth ſides had been two of the fineſt ranges of pillaſters and columns yet erected, either by ancients or moderns, had not their magnificence been here again interrupted by thoſe ridiculous block ruſtics in the architraves of the windows, which are of ſmall dimenſions, and have no affinity with the whole. —— The entablatures here, being continued entire throughout the whole length, are truly grand and magnificent; exceeding not only the Banqueting houſe, which has been ſo much admired, whoſe entablatures are broken over every column and pillaſter, but even all other buildings in London, even St. Paul's itſelf.

The round columns at each angle of the church, which our Critic ſays, are well conceived, happen to be ſquare columns or rather pillaſters; there not being any columns, but to the four enterances, and to the portico, which is not inferior to any of the kind that has been yet built.—Methinks 'tis pity, that the watch-houſe againſt it is not removed, and a ſpacious ſemicircular area made before it, which would contribute very much to its magnificence. — The ruſtic frontiſpieces to the ſix doors, having their architraves and freezes broken by the key ſtones, is a moſt terrible abſurdity; as is the mean height of the ſpire, which ought to have conſiſted of three heights of columns, inſtead of one, which affords a moſt miſerable poor appearance, much beneath that magnificency and grandeur which one would juſtly expect in the pariſh church of our ſovereign lord the king.

As the ancients deemed it an abſurdity to introduce two heights of rooms, within the height of one order, as I have before obſerved; ſo I think 'tis as abſurd to place the galleries in a church to cut againſt the ſhafts of columns, which in this church they do: this deſtroys the beauty of the columns, by hindering them from being ſeen clear throughout their entire height. The method obſerved in St. Andrew's Holbourn, and in St. Clement's, to me ſeems much more natural; where the galleries are ſupported by ſquare pillaſters, on which are placed the columns to ſupport the ceiling, whoſe ſhafts are clear, and preſent themſelves in their utmoſt beauty.

We never received any account of the Review near Salisbury, and ſhould be glad of the Gentleman's correſpondence who ſent it; deſiring him, and others, for the future, to direct their letters to our printer, which is the moſt ſpeedy and certain way of conveyance.

We have an account from Jamaica, that the rebellious Negroes deſert daily, and have lately cut off a party of 150 white men. That their chief town is impregnable, being ſeated on a high eminence, and fortify'd with ſeveral redoubts, and the paſſage to it ſo narrow, that only two or three perſons can go a-breſt. That ſome of them come down in diſguiſe on market-days to trade with the Jews for powder, notwithſtanding 'tis death for one of them to have above a pound in his cuſtody, and carry away all the white men they can conveniently lay their hands on: that their number is very numerous in their towns on the hills, having a king over them: that if they are not ſpeedily quell'd, the conſequence may prove fatal, which will require a great force to effect. C. P. DA. Oct. 1. —— If ſo, 'tis hoped it will never be effected.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THURSDAY, Sept. 26. —— Paris, Sept. 20. N. S. All our letters from the Levant confirm, that a peace is concluded between the Turks and the Perſians. C.

Hanover, Sept. 24. The new univerſity at Goetingen is to be opened forthwith; there are already between 70 and 80 ſtudents. P

FRIDAY, Sept. 27. Luzara, near which the Imperialiſts lately attacked the Allies, is famous for a battle in 1702, between prince Eugene and Philip duke of Anjou, when both armies pretended equally to the victory. DA.

SATURDAY, Sept. 28 —— Modena, Sept. 18. The inhabitants of 5 ſtreets of this city are ordered to prepare their houſes, that they may be ready to receive French troops. C. —— Have orders to quit their houſes. DP.

MONDAY, Sept. 30. —— Heidelberg, Sept. 28. By a courier from general de Konigſegg to prince Eugene, we are informed, that the battle of the 19th in Italy was maintain'd with grrat reſolution on both ſides; that after ſix hours engagement, the general thought proper to retire to his camp at Luzara, which he did in good order, and arriv'd there about four in the afternoon; that the loſs of the Imperialiſts amounted to about 5000; but that of the enemy was much more conſiderable: that prince Lewis of Wirtemberg and count Colmonero were kill'd, and the generals Wachtendonck, Lanthieri, and three others wounded DP.

Paris, Oct. 6. By our laſt account from Italy, the battle of the 19th paſt was very bloody; for during the combat, wherein the enemy had between 12 and 13,000 kill'd and wounded; they ſent away 200 waggons full of wounded men; but towards the end, being preſs'd too cloſely, were oblig'd to leave 900 wounded in the field, whom our general had remov'd in order to be taken care of. We reckon between 6 and 7000 kill'd and wounded on our ſide. After the battle the enemy intrench'd themſelves on the banks of the Po, over-againſt Burgo-Forte, where they have a bridge to retire over into Mantua in caſe of occaſion. On the 3d Te Deum was ſung in the church of Notre Dame. P. DP. DJ. —— An expreſs arriv'd on the 2d, and brought the news, that the enemy had repaſs'd the Po, broke down their bridges, and were retiring towards Mantua. DP. DJ.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 2. —— Berlin, Oct. 2. N. S. The ſwellings increaſe in his majeſty's legs and body. He has alſo had, within this day or two, convulſions in his face, which are looked upon as certain forerunners of another attack of an apoplexy; ſo that without ſome very ſudden alterations, a very few days will probably put an end to this prince's life. P. S. A report is juſt now ſpread here, that his majeſty is dead. C. &c.

Mantua, Sept. 24. We ſhould certainly have carry'd the victory completely, could we have forc'd the enemy to retire to the ſtreights of the triangle, &c. Our loſs amounts to between 4 and 5000 killed and wounded; that of the enemy was at leaſt equal. DP. —— Forc'd them to retreat. DJ. —— Been able to drive them into the narrow point. DA. —— They had then doubtleſs gain'd their point.

Paris, Oct. 1. We are aſſured, that there are already 7000 wounded men carried to Guaſtalla, among whom are 4000 Germans; and to judge by view, one would think there muſt be 16,000 dead upon the ſpot, of which number we reckon 10,000 of the enemy. P. DP.

Vienna, Sept. 25. The emperor has ordered a piece of muſic to be compoſed for 8 choirs, to ſing Te Deum for the victory gained in Italy. DJ.
